FYI The first paper produced specifically as toilet paper was introduced in the late 14th Century. This paper was requested by Chinese emperors and was produced by the Bureau of Imperial Supplies. The initial sheets measured 2 ft. x 3 ft. However, it wasn't until 1857 that the first commercially available toilet paper came into the United States—more than 300 years after the invention of the flush toilet! This toilet paper was produced by Joseph C. Gayetty of New York and marketed as a medicinal product. The sheets were premoistened and treated with aloe. About 20 years later, the Albany Perforated Wrapping Paper Company was selling rolled, perforated toilet paper. Around this same time, brothers Edward and Clarence Scott founded the Scott Paper Company and began selling rolls of paper for lavatory use. By the early 1900s, toilet paper as we recognize it today was readily available in both the U.S. and Europe. Current sheet size averages around 4.5" x 4.5", about a quarter of the size of the first rolls.

FYI The Center for Disease Control recommends hand washing after using the toilet. Used in addition to or in the absence of soap and water, alcohol-based hand sanitizers provide effective hand cleaning, as well. According to reports from the MMWR (Morbidity & Mortality Weekly Report), hand sanitizers are effective against multiple common disease agents, including E. coli and salmonella. For the best effectiveness, be sure to use hand sanitizers with an alcohol concentration of at least 60%.
