The chef's hat, or toque blanche (French for "white hat"), is a well-known kitchen staple, yet there are nearly as many theories of its origin as there are pleats in the hat itself. Some sources suggest that the chef's hat evolved from the stocking cap worn by French chefs in the 1800s. Others give credit to the ancient Assyrians, who regarded their chefs so highly as to allow them to wear special headdresses. Still others believe the chef's hat arose in the early 7th century when artists and intellectuals, including learned chefs, sought safety by hiding in monasteries and wearing the monk's customary robe and hat. Whatever their origin, the chef hat remains a standard part of traditional chef's attire.
